

WEG Named to the Aggie 100

Recently, WEG was named to The Aggie 100, which identifies, recognizes and celebrates the 100 fastest growing Aggie-owned or Aggie-led businesses in the world. Founding Principal/President, Ronald J. Boyd, is a proud Aggie graduate, and attended the ceremony in late Fall. "It is really a team effort; we are surrounded by good people" commented Boyd, when asked about the award.

The 2006 edition of the Aggie 100 was announced Friday, October 13 at ceremonies on Texas A&M's College Station campus. The 100 fastest growing Aggie-owned or Aggie-led companies in the world were honored at a luncheon attended by over 600 people. A&M leadership, students and business community representatives joined in the celebration to honor the first ever Aggie 100.

Cumulatively, Aggie 100 firms have more than 17,000 employees and revenues in excess of $3.3 billion in 2004. Williamsburg Environmental Group, Inc. has contributed to this number significantly and has grown by leaps and bounds these past few years – which immediately made them a contender for the running.

"The Aggie 100 is another unique feature of Texas A&M. In addition to honoring deserving graduates, the program provides a forum for today's students to interact with and learn from successful business people," said Robert M. Gates, president, Texas A&M University. "We are proud of our former students and appreciate their willingness to give back to the university that gave them a start in their career. I'll be excited to see the list in future years as today's students put these lessons into practice." Boyd mingled at the ceremony with past and present Aggie students, and was honored to meet with the Dean of the College of Geosciences, Atmospheric Science to discuss WEG's award.
